

Acme inaugurates job bus to recruit 400 new workers in Spain

January 5, 2009- Acme has adopted an innovative recruitment technique – the job bus – to find 400 new workers in Spain north-eastern coast.

Acme ran this local recruitment campaign in partnership with the Spanish national employment labour agencies, the Spanish electricity utility and the Spanish council. From March to April 2008, the job bus stopped in 19 towns and reached a large number of local jobseekers.

Recruitment teams and site managers from Acme received more than 1,800 applicants. The group will thus have no difficulty in finding the 400 additional workers it needs to carry out the project, which will employ a total of 800 staff in peak periods. Customized training will be given to the new recruits prior to the start of the civil engineering works in early 2009.

Acme is enjoying strong business in 2007 both in Spain and other countries. It aims to attract new talent to keep pace with its development and successfully carry out its projects.

About ACME:

Acme is the main player in Europe, deploying its expertise across the full spectrum of building and infrastructure construction and operating businesses, including property development and road construction.

Founded in 1950, ACME bases its growth on the acquisition of companies exercising activities with strong recurring profits.